Kene Holliday

Class of 1967

Kene remembers being a member of the first 7th grade class in the new Junior High wing. He is grateful to his classmates for the most special time in his life. He attended the University of Maryland on a full athletic scholarship to play football. He majored in speech and drama. Kene is a founding member of two Washington, D.C. theater companies. His stage credits include Carlyle in "Streamers" directed by Mike Nichols at Lincoln Center, Vantile Mayfield in "Joe Louis Blues" at the L.A. Theater Center, among many other roles; his TV and film roles include parts in the TV series "Matlock" and "Carter Country." He also appeared in "The Josephine Baker Story," "True Confessions," and "Goonies." Kene travels the world as an orator carrying his message of spirituality.

"When dreaming, dream outlandishly and be prepared."
