Another Year Another Book

Dr. William Glasser, author of SCHOOLS WITHOUT FAILURE, conducts a simulated-house discussion with Roosevelt students.

The Yearbook Staff thinks a title should sum up an entire year. Last year was easy--METAMORPHOSIS meant change. This year the staff considered everything from TRAMIRAD (that's Dari-Mart spelled backwards) to THE FENCE AND THE FIELD. Nothing seemed quite right so the main factions compromised on "no title."

Choosing a color for the cover posed the same problem--half wanted blue and half wanted white. After fourteen ballots, complete with nominating speeches, the staff chose goldenrod. It only took four changes to choose the photo used on the cover.

Once the title and cover were taken care of, the staff went to work on this volume which has four pages more than last year and contains an index for the first time. The index is fairly complete but in some of the large group or casual pictures it is impossible to identify a nose here and a forehead there, so many students are not totally indexed. Look carefully, you may be surprised where the cameraman found you.

Some Practical Classes

Many classes at Roosevelt are popular because they combine a great deal of practice with the theory. For example, the theory behind baking eventually leads a boy in Bachelor Specialities to prepare a cake filled with the usual ingredients--plus pride. Once out of the classroom Outdoor Ed practices everything from nature lore to sanitation. The Madrigal Singers lend their class-trained voices to public performances of SHREW.

Native American art was used in a class on Northwest Indians

A student in a criminology class measures the stride found in blood (real) at the scene of a kidnaping (simulated). Criminology offered the student a chance to collect data, make observations, analyze unknown materials, and formulate hypotheses, all with the purpose of solving a crime. Below, evidence collected to solve a crime.

The Child Care Class uses real kids.

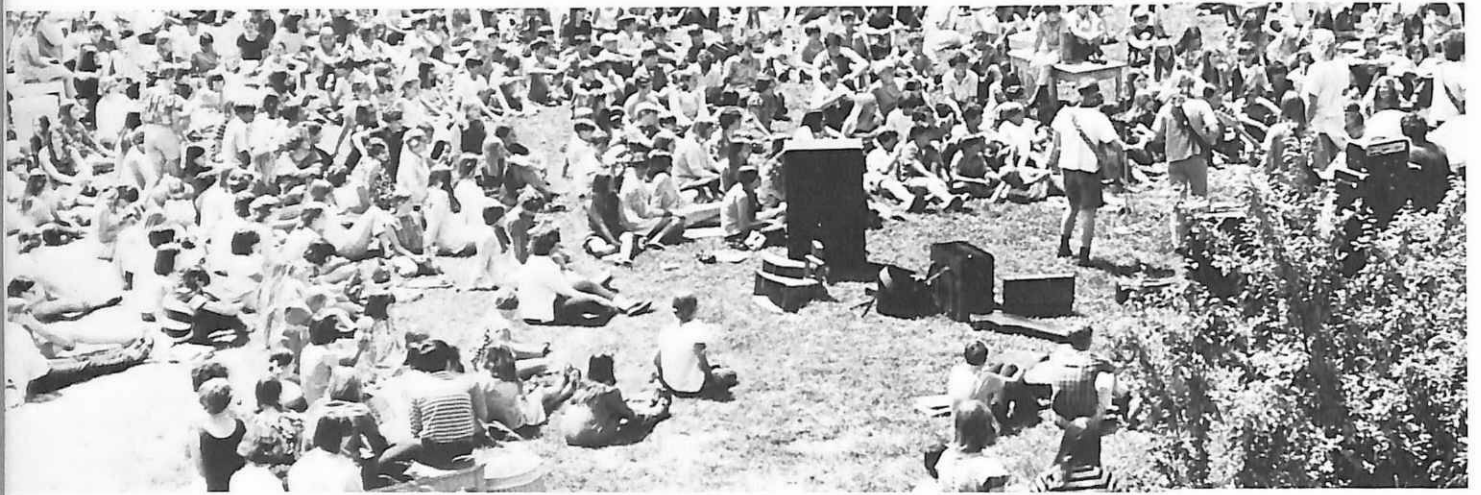

entertained Shakespeare audiences.

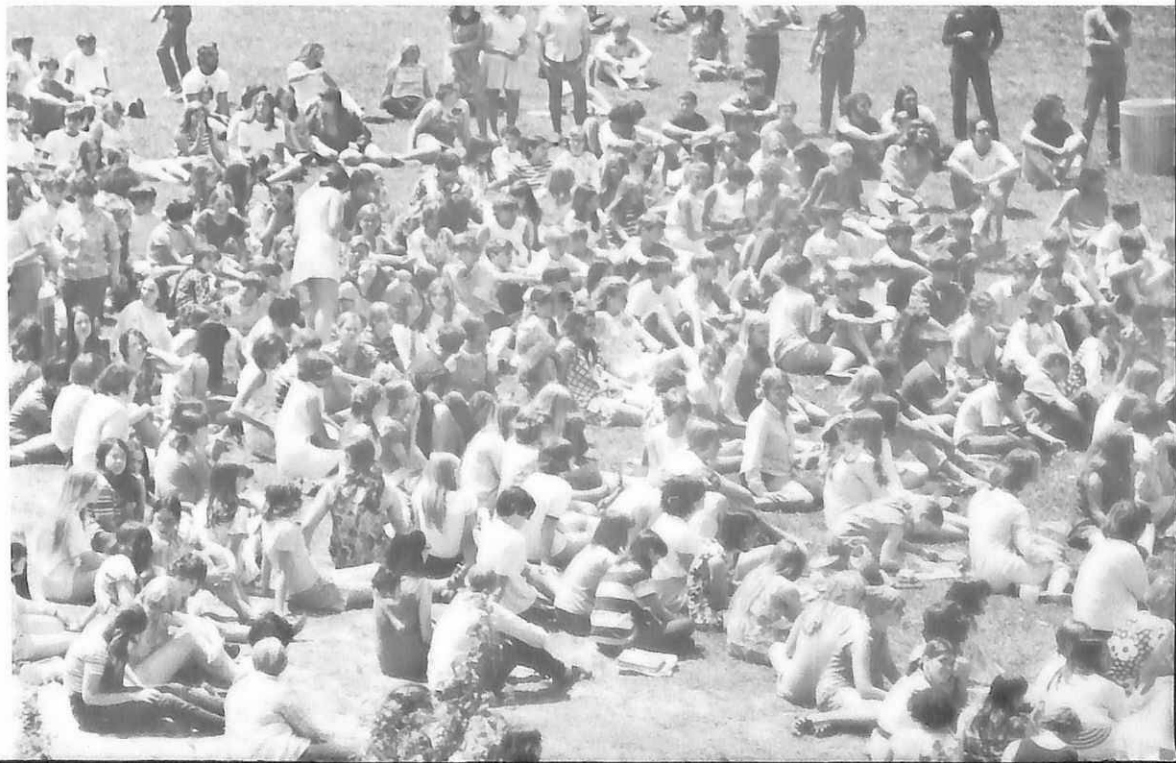

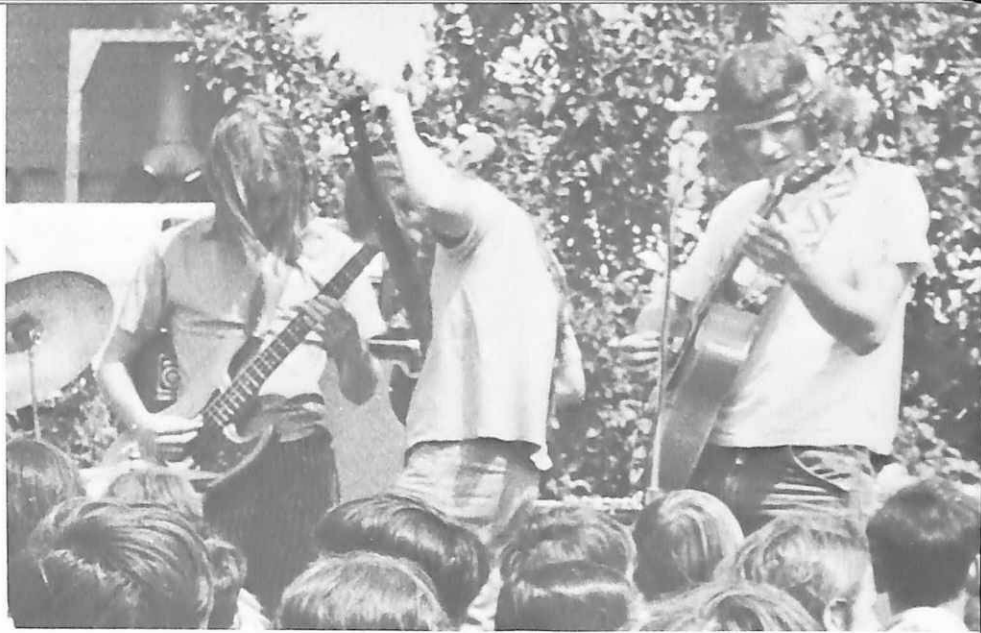

Bachelor Specialities offered the graduates of Bachelor Skills an opportunity to prepare more complex, and usually more delectable, dishes.
