The Roosevelt Experience

No one knows for sure exactly when and where it started, but a little over five years ago some of the Roosevelt staff and students began to sense that a time for change was at hand. They began to take a close look at themselves and their school. They started to discuss what kind of a school Roosevelt was, and what sort of school it should become. What emerged was general agreement that new ways should be found to place more emphasis on the individual and try to make the school a place for learning rather than a place where teaching goes on.

Much study, thought, and discussion produced a beginning, a broad outline reflecting a new total school philosophy and basic changes in the structure of the program. It seemed to offer a hope for finding some of the answers to the questions that arose when they asked themselves, "What should schools be doing for kids today?"

The district administration was helpful and supportive. Permission was granted for Roosevelt to begin a three-year program of experimentation and change. The Roosevelt program was begun.

The knowledge explosion is an awesome thing. It is said that the total sum of what man knows doubled every fifty years before 1800 and every ten years between 1800 and 1860. It is safe to assume that the pace will continue to accelerate and that man's total information will double each half decade for the next fifteen to twenty years.

Add to these kinds of facts the trend toward greater depersonalization in our mass society, the mobility of the population, and the effect of mass media on learning, and it becomes clear that public education systems today must be prepared for continuous drastic and radical changes.

From this philosophy emerged
Roosevelt's four goals:

Agency

- to help each student become personally involved in his learning - to be free to explore actively his own resources and those of the school and the larger environment.

Motivation

- to help each student become his own agent, learn how to take charge of the development of his own potential, and to understand that only he, in the long run, is responsible for his learning.

Creativity

- to help each student develop enough confidence in himself and in others to be able to think imaginatively and explore openly ideas, values, and relationships.

Scholarship

- to help students find true satisfaction in learning, and to understand that the subject matter skills acquired are not only useful in themselves, but are tools with which to meet situations and solve problems.

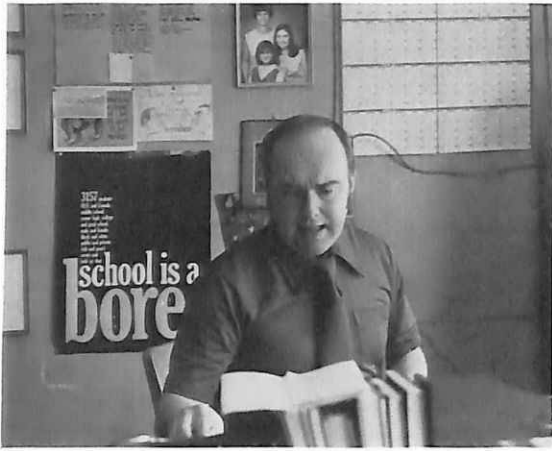

We must develop in today's student an ability to cope with change. We must develop in young people skills, attitudes, habits of mind, and the kinds of knowledge and understanding that will be instruments for change and growth. We must fashion a system that provides for its own continuous renewal.

As teaching and learning improve, students will have fewer gaps in their knowledge of how to work creatively in unfamiliar intellectual territory, and will be better able to evaluate information and reach decisions.

In the final analysis, each of us must learn for himself, and in the rapid pace of change in the world it is urgent that we produce skills in independent learning, from emphasis upon memory to emphasis upon creativity, attitudes, and values.

Donald Jackson

Roosevelt Junior High School is one of the outstanding educational institutions in the United States, but this did not come about accidentally. Changing norms and value systems brought the Roosevelt community to the realization that a positive self-concept is the most important virtue one can possess to cope with the confusion and frustration resulting from constant change. The foundations of the Roosevelt program then, is to find ways to help students develop a positive self-concept.

No clear-cut guidelines for success in this endeavor existed, but it seemed obvious that the first steps should involve the opportunity for students to make viable choices and be responsible for their consequences, and to attain multiples of success as a result of these experiences.

Roosevelt, therefore, provides students the opportunity to set up prescription schedules in a totally elective curriculum void of grades and grade levels. These steps allow for numerous success experiences and the development of basic skills with each day's attendance.

Teachers are allowed to offer classes of their choice, but they are accountable to the students and parents for their relevance and acceptance.

Student and teacher awareness of their good fortune to have been a part of this process will best be known to them when they reflect, years from now, on what happened to them at Roosevelt. I am looking forward to this myself.

Donald M. Jackson

Brad Templeman

Roosevelt Junior High School is a very unique school. I've worked in many schools and a lot of people I've worked for have worked in a lot of schools and we generally agree that Roosevelt is the best school we've worked at. Part of it's the kids, part of it's the staff, and part of it's the parents. But they all seem to fit together and it's fun to come to school for a change instead of a drag.

I think the biggest advantages of Roosevelt are: One, the relationship between the staff and the students. The students feel a lot more comfortable about themselves because the teachers give the kids a lot of encouragement, and don't hold themselves aloof. Two, the students choose to take a lot of the responsibility upon themselves and we think that's what life is all about. So, when Roosevelt kids hit another school they're already old pros at taking care of themselves while other students have not had that experience.

Student Government at Roosevelt consist of several branches, which can be paralleled to branches of the Federal Government. The executive branch consists of the offices of Student Body President and Vice President, the treasurer, the secretary, and the historian. The Judicial branch is the CIC, of constitutional interpretation committee. The Legislative branch is the research committee, which reviews bills to be submitted to the student body for vote. It also consists of the twelve or thirteen students, one for each three houses, who have voting rights at faculty meetings. Elections are held at the beginning of the last quarter.

Classes

ROOSEVELT JUNIOR HIGH IS ONE OF THEM.

A lot goes on in a junior high school. The seventh, eighth, and ninth grades represent a period of transition.

It's a time when young people begin to understand that increasingly they are going to be called upon to make their own decisions.

And a time when many will begin to describe to themselves the kinds of persons they are, and the sorts of persons they intend to become.

Left: The advisors "review the troops" while the impatient students wait to cross the forbidding tape line. Right: The registrars enjoy their last moment of peace before the onslaught.

Registration

By the end of the quarter, a successful student is usually prepared for an ordeal termed registration. Preparation for this exciting event is very simple. It includes a minor process of figuring out class preferences and alternatives and effectively arranging them into an interesting schedule. The major part of registration is conditioning the mind and body for anxieties and disappointments, rushing about, and providing and withstanding tremendous impact. In other words, quick thinking and fast action. For a newly-arrived student or seventh-grader, this process can be especially confusing and exhausting. The result: a heavily altered schedule. An appropriate term for registration is: A Fight For Survival.

But who makes it all possible? The structural backbone of the whole registering process are the registrars. The determined and well-meaning parents who come to offer their services for registration enter the process happy and determined. They emerge thoroughly exhausted and irritable, but happy that the great ordeal is over. They brush themselves off, state the fact that they're relieved that it's over with, and ultimately swear that they'll never do it again. Later they realize their great achievement and decide to prove that they can go through one more registration and actually remain in existence. The result: about 70% of the registrars at each registration have had the experience of being pushed around by enthusiastic students and actually enjoy it!

To sum it all up, for registering students and registrars, and our beloved advisors, and staff, Registration is an extremely exhausting (but worthwhile) experience.

One of the many expanding Roosevelt horizons is that of radio and television broadcasting. Last year a class was taught in which the students produced a television show. This year a new student teacher, Mike Moskowitz, taught a class to find out if any Roosevelt students had an interest in old radio programs. The result was surprising, and Radio Yesteryear became one of Roosevelt's most popular classes. The two sections each produced an episode from an imaginary radio serial, one class doing "The Adventures of Chicken Man" while the other did "Sam Snead, Private Eye". The shows were featured in the Register-Guard, and were played over several local radio stations.

This year, for the first time, Roosevelt had a French Club. Under the guidance of their faculty advisor Natalie Goldschmidt they worked on several projects, including a foreign language Christmas party. Roosevelt also has a Chess Club. This year they sent a team to the OMSI tournament, consisting of four players and four alternates. Chess has long been a source of intellectual exercise for Roosevelt students. Frank Debrick and Judy Francis are faculty advisors to the Chess Club.

The Roosevelt soccer teams again enhanced the Rough Rider athletic image by coming in first and second in the city this year.

The 7th and 8th grade team continued the first place standing of last year's team. They won the league with a 5-0-2 record. They were led by center forward Brian McCool. The tough defense was led by Bob Stephenson at center-half.

The 9th graders, coming out of a 7-0-0 performance as 8th graders, managed a 3-2-2 record this year for second place in the city. The team was led by center-forward Derek Johnson, who also led the team in scoring.
