LoAnn

ROUGH RIDER '76
ROOSEVELT JR. HIGH

680 E. 24TH STREET EUGENE, OREGON

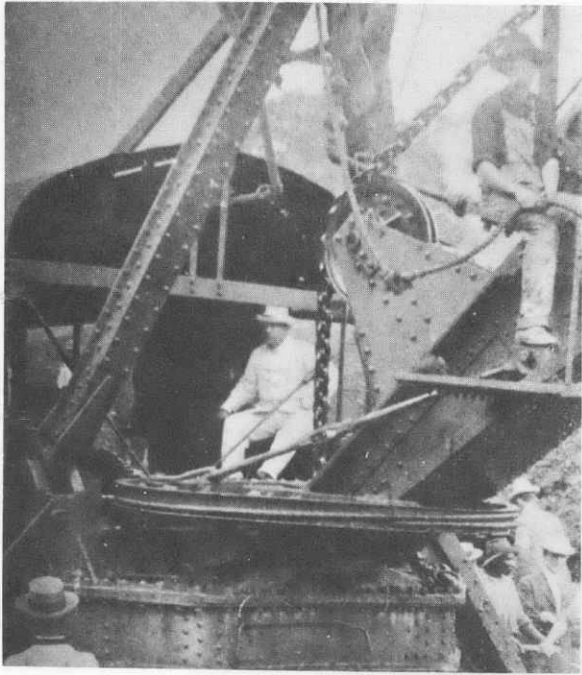

During his childhood Theodore Roosevelt suffered from asthma attacks. As he was not a particularly robust boy, this fact alone led his parents, a rather wealthy family of Dutch ancestry to seek tutors for his education. Under these tutors he studied Latin, English, History, and spelling. Spelling, however, seemed to be a problem with him even in the way he spelled his own name: "Tedio". He studied hard under the tutelage of his teachers. Teddy received an exceptional education as a boy which allowed him to enter Harvard university early with a strong background and a love of natural history.

It was also during this time that his father told Teddy that he had a good mind but that wasn't enough. He also had to have a strong body. His father had a great influence on the younger man. He took his father's advice so literally that he went on to become the college's lightweight boxing champion. This interest in physical fitness can be seen in Roosevelt's later years in the White House. Often, Teddy would take long walks, even if he had news reporters or important guests visiting. He would go on these walks and take his guests with him, not speaking until they reached their destination. These walks usually turned out to be between a cross-country run and a 15,000 meter sprint.

After he completed his course of study at Harvard, in 1880, he went on to Columbia University law school. He was then only twenty-two years old. It was also during this time of his life that he met and married his first wife, Alice Hathaway Lee, from Boston. She died only four years later in childbirth. He was an aspiring politician at this time who held public office in the New York Assembly. Two years later he realized the child needed a mother and he, too, needed a wife.

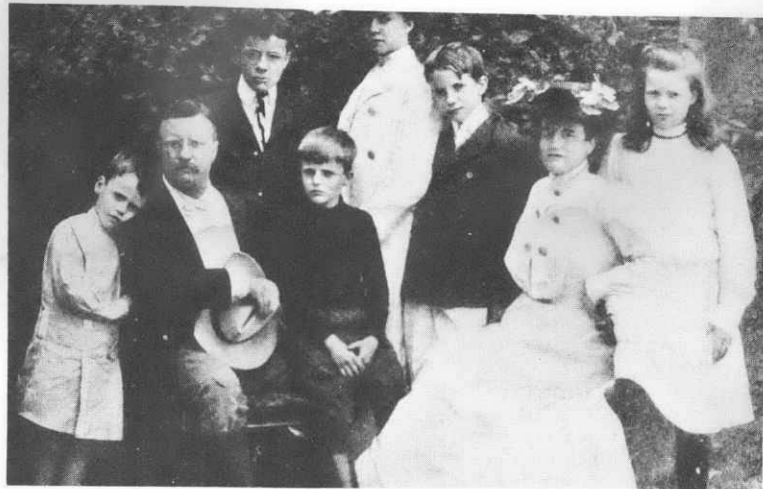

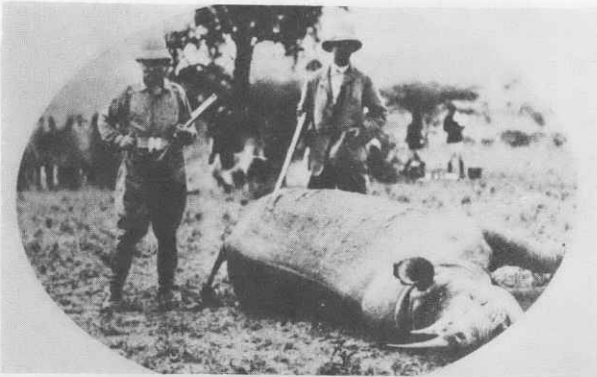

He returned to his childhood sweetheart, whom he married in 1884, and lived the rest of his life with her.

It was during this period in Teddy's life that he began one of the most sensational political careers in history. He worked his way up to assistant Secretary of the Navy under President McKinly. In fact, it was at Roosevelt's strong urging in that office, that the U. S. declared war against Spain. He immediately resigned his position as the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and started forming the first Volunteer Cavalry in 1898. He became known as the colonel of the regiment which later became known as the "Rough Riders". Although he disobeyed orders and official Army red tape, he successfully led his Cavalry Unit up the now-famous San Juan Hill.

When Teddy returned home from his heroic effort in the Spanish-American War, he made many friends in the political realm--also enemies. Roosevelt was easily elected to the post of Governor of New York and completed a very successful term of office. However, when the time for re-election came around, a Republican boss from New York one of the many political leaders whom Teddy had offended, felt that it was time to remove this "bull in a china shop." He maneuvered Roosevelt into the 1900 nomination for vice-president with McKinly as President. He did this under the assumption that Teddy would do less harm as figurehead vice-president than as Governor of New York.

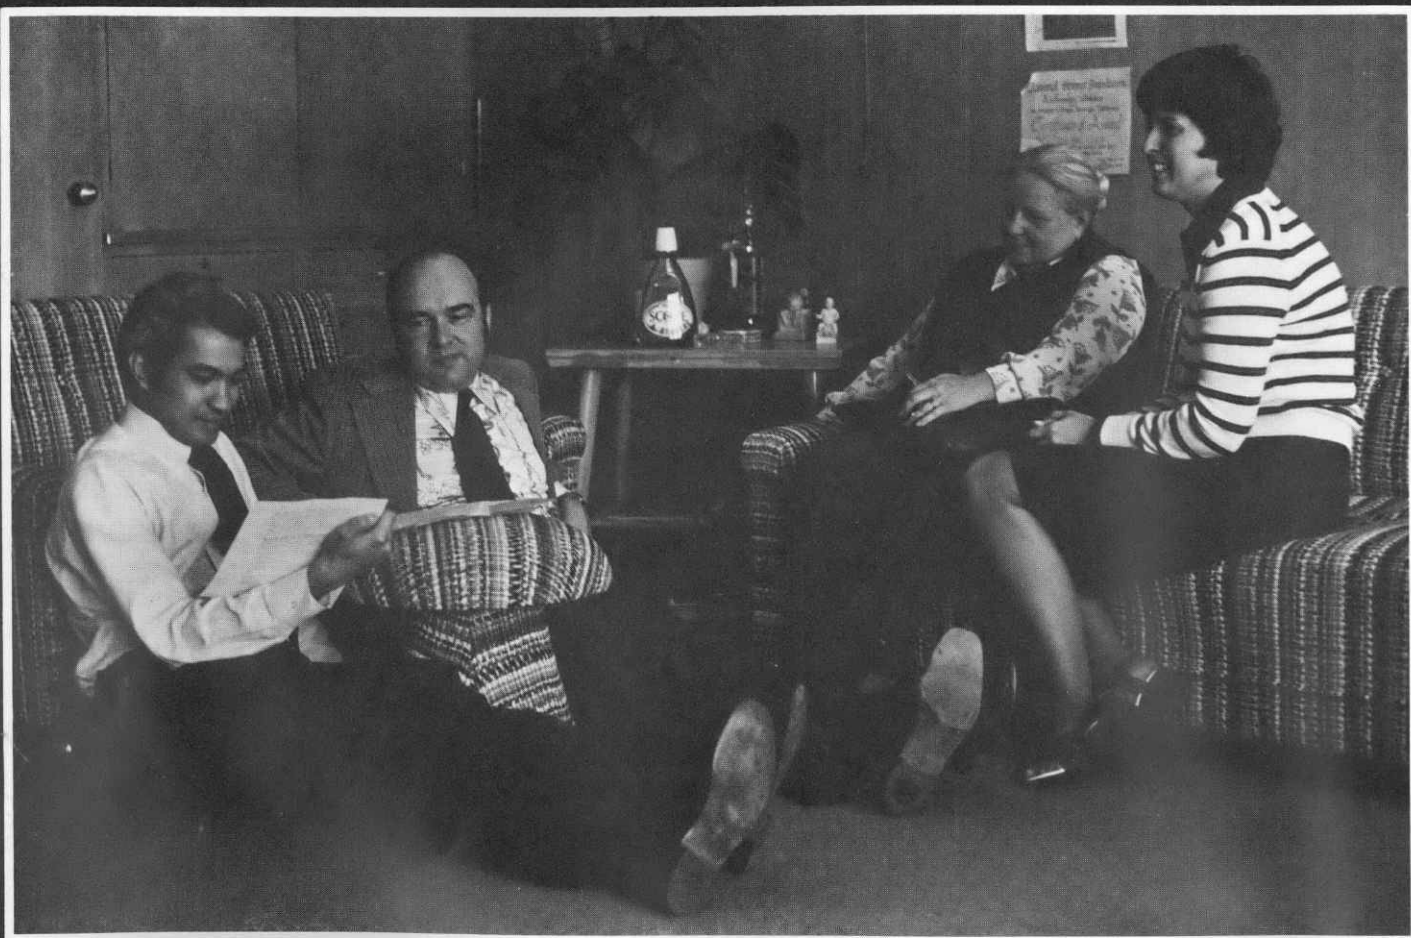

When McKinly was assassinated on September 14, 1901, Teddy took over the highest political office. It was at this time that Teddy put into practice his longheld theory on foreign policy: "Walk softly and carry a big stick."

During the 1974-75 school year, a group of concerned students felt that the constitution being used at that time needed revising. They found the constitution both difficult to understand and operate. It soon became apparent that a different constitution was necessary if the student government was to be effective at Roosevelt. Several students worked throughout the summer, and in the fall of 1975, the present constitution was voted on and passed by the Roosevelt student body.

Consequently, the original cabinet elected in the spring of 1975 ended their duties when the new constitution was ratified. These officers were succeeded by;

Bruce Davis as President
 Tony Molators as Vice-President
 Bill Service as Treasurer
 Karen Bates as Secretary of Environmental Quality
 Teresa Sheets as Historian
 Kathy Keener as Secretary

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: Bruce, Davis, Tony Molatore, Harris Hunt, Kathy Keener, Diane Harris, Janet Bearsto, Susan Hoyt, Glen Sabin, Chris Piccioni, Shannon Williams, Lynnett Tubb
 These people are serving as the student body leaders under the new constitution.

Did you ever wonder why we at Roosevelt are called the "Rough Riders"?

Originally "Rough Riders" were the members of a volunteer regiment of the U. S. cavalry organized chiefly by Theodore Roosevelt for service in the Spanish-American war. Roosevelt and his associate did not relish the title at first, but it stuck, and, like many terms applied in humor, it became a title of honor.

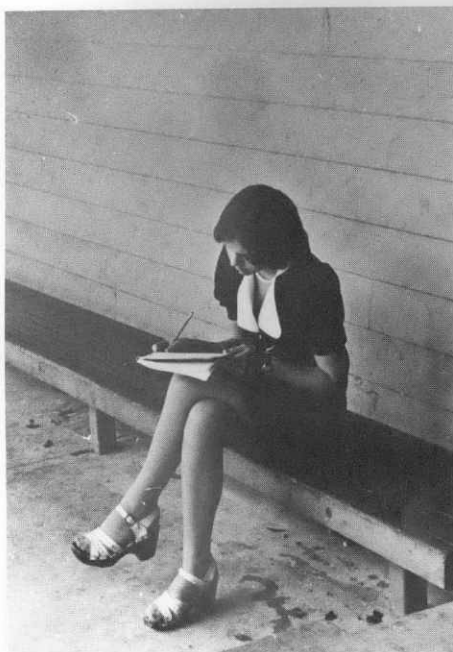

At Roosevelt Jr. High we have many responsibilities: choosing classes, registering for classes, and attending those classes. Sometimes the classes take over the school in order to make it a better school. One such class is "Roosevelt Politics".

Roosevelt Jr. High people are "Rough and Ready". That is, because we have to face up to our responsibilities sooner than other junior high schools in the nation. Therefore; we are proud to call ourselves the "Rough Riders".

House is a time in the day where students go and talk to a teacher that has been assigned to them as an advisor.
In House we talk to other people in House; we also take care of school business. Such as class skipping, general news and evaluations.
House is also a time to talk with friends, take part in intramurals, and do home work.
After school hours, houses get together and do things like going out for pizza, roller skating, and just getting together.
These things are what House really is.
